

1. Write 3 things you learned from today's lesson.

As the reporters discussed their designated topics, these are the points that really caught my attention:

- Social media's strong influence: I realized how deeply social media affects the way people communicate, it connects us instantly but also brings issues like misinformation and addiction, which made me think about how I personally use these platforms. Fortunately, I am not that active in my social accounts.
- The need for clear communication planning: I found it interesting that effective communication doesn't just happen naturally, it actually requires planning, timing, and choosing the right platform to make sure the message is clear and consistent.
- Technology changing presentations: I liked how the reporters explained that using tools like Canva or PowerPoint isn't just about design, but about choosing what fits the message and the audience best. It reminded me that good communication is more about purpose than flashiness.

2. Write 2 things you found interesting or would like to learn more about.

These are the topics I'd like to explore further:

- How language evolves online: I find it fascinating how new media changes our language—like how we use emojis, slang, or even “Taglish” to express emotions in a way that feels natural online.
- Responsible use of technology in communication: I want to learn more about how communicators can use technology creatively but still stay ethical and respectful when spreading information.

3. Write 1 questions you still have or something you need more help with.

Here's one questions I found challenging to fully understand:

- How can we ensure that tech-based communication is “effective” when visuals, tone, and interactivity can make people interpret the same message in totally different ways?
